

Once upon a time in a big orchard,
there lived a butterfly and an ant.

In spring, Butterfly liked to play in the sun. But Ant always worked.

“Come and play with me, Ant!” said Butterfly. “The flowers here are so sweet! Let’s enjoy them together!”

“I can’t, Butterfly, ” Said Ant. “I need to store a lot of food for the winter.”

“Don’t be stupid! The food here is enough,” said Butterfly. “You can do it tomorrow!”

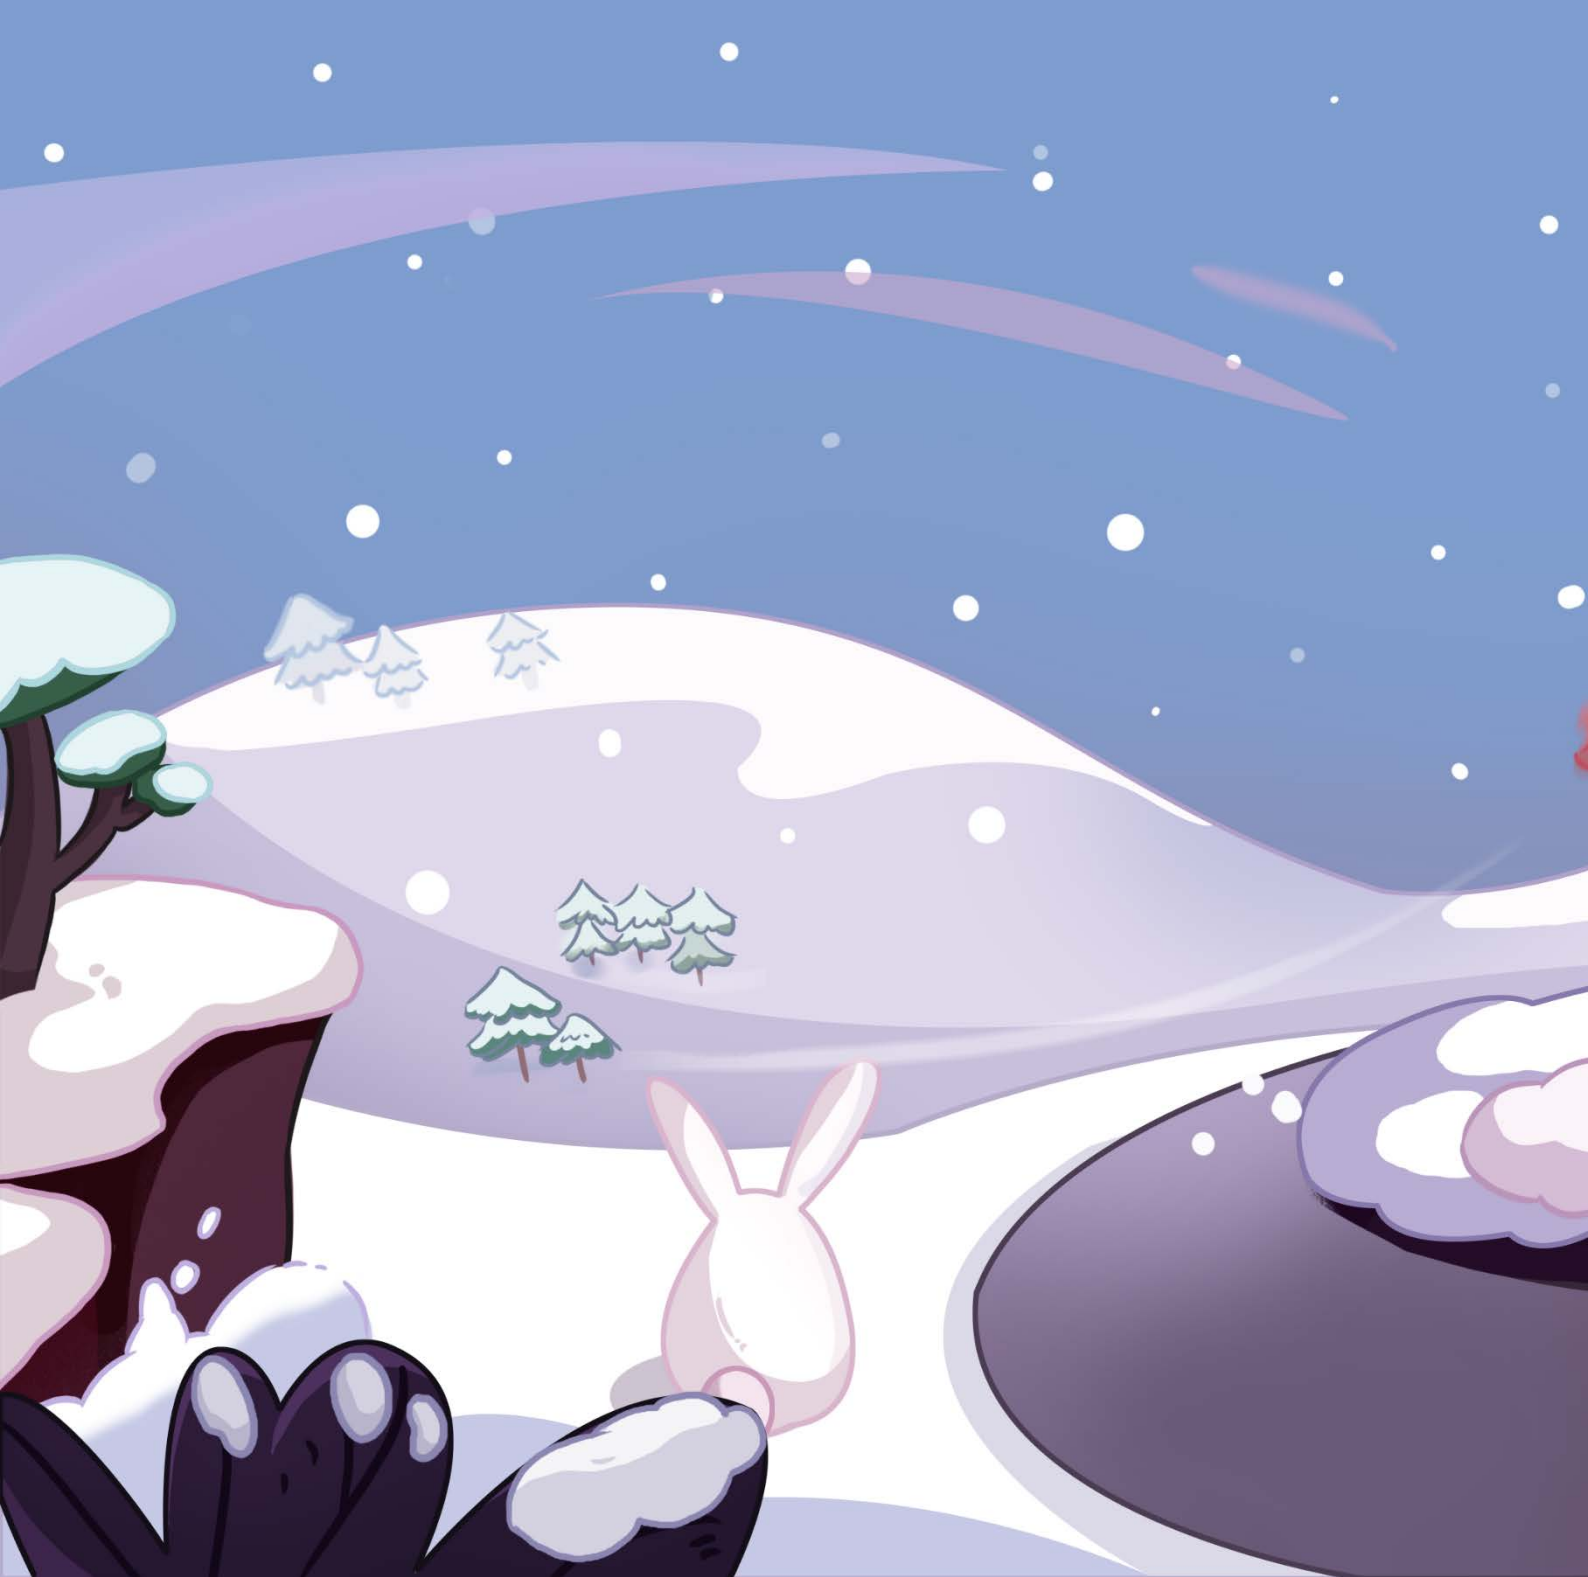

“Never put off what you can do today till tomorrow,” said Ant. “Winter will come soon. And you will be hungry if you don’t store food now.”

Day after day passed by. Butterfly played happily in the orchard. He still believed he could store his food tomorrow.

Ant always worked hard, and he continued to carry food to his home. When Butterfly laughed at him, he didn't care.

Winter came. The orchard was covered with snow. And all plants died.

Butterfly didn't store any food at home. He decided to find food outside.

At the same time, Ant enjoyed his food at home. “Thanks to my hard work, I can live a happy life this winter!” said Ant.

All of the plants died that winter. Butterfly couldn't find any food outside. He was hungry and cold in the snow.

Butterfly came to Ant's home and asked for help. "An... An... Ant! I am so cold and hungry. Could you give me some food, please?" asked Butterfly.

Ant opened the door and felt surprised. "Please come in, Butterfly. I have enough food, and I can share with you," said Ant.

Ant shared a part of his food with Butterfly.

Butterfly was moved, but he also felt ashamed of himself.

“Ant, it was wrong of me to laugh at you,” Butterfly said. “I will work hard next year. Thank you very much, Ant, my brother and friend!”

“You’re welcome, Butterfly!” said Ant. “Let’s work hard together next year!”

The next year came. The orchard was full of food again. Ant still worked hard and carried food to his home.

Butterfly didn't play this spring, but worked hard. Would Butterfly feel cold and hungry again this winter?